

Carolina Garcia-Vidal

Hospital Clinic de Barcelona, Spain

She won the award of the best PhD by the Catalan Society of Medicine. She also won among others the young investigator award for research by the Spanish Society of Medicine (2009) and the young investigator award for research by the European Society of Clinical Microbiology and Infectious Diseases (2014). She is currently member of the Scientific affairs subcommittee at European Society of Clinical Microbiology.

Her research focuses on immunocompromised host infections. Her work is based on clinical research and covers a large range of topics, including among others severe infections in onco-hematologic patients and transplantation (i.e multidrug-resistant infections), fungal infections, pneumonia and infections in patients receiving biological therapies. She has produced much original data, and published more than 140 indexed publications in several prominent journals with more than 4700 citations. Her present Hirsch Index is 37.