

Jae-Seok Kim

Hallym University College of Medicine, Korea

Jae-Seok Kim graduated from Seoul National University with an M.D. in 1993 and earned Ph.D from the same university in 2006. He completed a residency in Laboratory Medicine (Clinical Pathology) at Seoul National University Hospital. Upon completion of training as a specialist, he joined the faculty of Hallym University College of Medicine in Korea. He is currently Professor of Laboratory Medicine and Director of Clinical Microbiology in Kangdong Sacred Heart Hospital in Seoul. Doctor Kim is board certified in Laboratory Medicine. He has served as Secretary General and Academic Affairs of Korean Society of Clinical Microbiology. He is now in charge of external quality control of bacteriology part at Korean External Quality Assurance Associations. Doctor Kim's research focuses on clinical bacteriology, clinical diagnostic testing, development of clinical methods for rapid, sensitive detection of pathogens, biocides, and molecular epidemiology and antimicrobial resistance of Gram positive bacteria such as Staphylococcus aureus.